HERMAN'S ARMY IN THE ROCKY MOUNT SECTION

Edrington's history of Fairfield). e writer who tells of Sherman's ch through South Carolina has a olific as well as a sorrowful theme. everal days before the arrival of the rmy at Rocky Mount, February 22nd, 1865, the southern heavens were covered wit the smoke of burning buildings. Each day the smoke appeared nearer and nearer and the hearts of that the general and his friends apthe people beat faster. Next came a throng of fugitives, fleeing from their homes endeavoring to save their stock and a few valuables. Then came their high personal regard, and to their streggling soldiers with many tales of sincre appreciation of those elements woe and horror. Next was heard the of character which have endeared you to them, have, by to-day? Adams exskirmish near Gladdens, then the smoke of the ueighbers' buildings was seen in black columns ascending heavenward, then came the sound of the taps of the drum. The yankee soldiers dashed up to the doors, gold and silver watches and silver plate were believe the artist has thoroughly predemanded, and whether given up or served in marble the kind, genial and not, the houses were thoroughly searched and everything they wanted stolen. Often when they did not wish the articles themselves they took them and gave them to the negroes.

Yards were cleared of dogs, in one instance a soldier presented his gun to shoot a dog which had fled to its mistress' feet for protection. Had not an officer ordered him to desist, death might have been the result to the lady (Mrs. Robert Ford.) Fire arms wer taken away and destroyed, a great many thrown into the Catawba River. The poultry was all taken, bacon, flour, corn meal, corn and provisions of all kinds removed. Every locked door was forced open, gin houses and cotion burnt in every instance. This much was done by the first installment. Late in the evening they put pontoon bridges across the river and a part of the army went over in the afternoon of the 22nd. It rained and the water rose and broke the pontoons. By the morning of the 23rd the encampmen reached from Caldwell's Cross Roads, on both roads, to Rocky Mount Ferre. Tre six days and nights that the army spent there was a time of much sorrow and fear to the ladies and few old men who were at home.

Gen. Jeff C. Davis, of the U. S. Army, had his headquarters at the house of Robert Ford for twenty-four hours. He drove Mrs. Ford, her aged family from her room to an open port ico to spend the night, an unpleasantly cold and wet one. He occupied her vention was fixed by the New Orleans room, much to her discomfort. Gen. meeting for Memphis, which will be white steeds, stolen on the march. His delphia prior to the Memphis gathermeals were served on silver waiters.

Gen. Sherman travelled through this vicinity on horse back and save the wanton destruction of property, did nothing to render himself obnexious. He had burnt ten buildings belonging to Mr Robert Ford, among them a large barn and stable. Several secret efforts were made to burn the the interests present dwelling house but it was saved through the kind efforts of an I soldier, w be glad to men; fast friend in the He found some Mason about the house and asked Mrs. Ford if her husband was a Mason. On being an swered in the affirmative, he had the house and yard soon cleared of pillagers, gathered a few provisions and delphia to New Orleans, via Louissent in, and placed a guard over the ville and Memphis, to be followed by premises. When he moved he left a others from such Northern cities as paper which he hoped would be some can be arrang d to various points in protection, but there was but little left the South. These excursions will bethen to protect.

The yankee soldiers shot down all kinds of stock; destroyed all farm implements and burnt the fencing. Daring their six days stay at Rocky Mount they foraged the country for miles. going in squads of from four to ten sametimes without arms. Gen. Sherman's headquarters were near the Barkly mansion. He treated the ladies in this section politely.
